"What are We Really Up Against?"

(Written by Norman Miller nearly 30 years ago. Not much has changed.)

Sweeping across our land today is the general belief that there is no right or wrong, no absolute standard by which to guide our lives. People holding this view are called "amoralists". The dictionary defines "amoral" as not being concerned with moral standards. For these people, anything goes. They say that you should do whatever you want because one lifestyle is as good as another.

F. LaGard Smith, law professor at Pepperdine University and author of The Cultural Church, gives some frightening examples of this sort of thinking from his seminar on law and morality. His students commonly say that there is no such thing as evil. Even when asked about the Holocaust and the extermination of six million Jews, they say it was not inherently evil. Even Jewish students say it was not inherently evil. Smith quotes on Jewish girl who said, "I sure wouldn't want it to happen to me or my family, but I simply cannot impose my morality on anyone else". Tolerance is now the big theory. Hence, in the view of these people, anything goes; we should, therefore tolerate everything. Expect this view to become increasingly more widespread [Norman was right. TG]. Parents with small children especially need to be equipped to fortify their children against the relentless effort to blur [obliterate, TG] the line between right and wrong; good and evil.

As Christians, we know that God is good (Matthew 19:17). "Exalt the Lord our God and worship at His footstool; He is holy" (Psalm 99:5). "I am the Lord your God; consecrate yourselves and be holy, because I am holy" (Leviticus 11:44). The apostle Peter was inspired to refer to this very scripture saying, "But just as He who called you is holy, so be holy in all you do; for it is written, 'Be holy because I am holy'" (1 Peter 1:15).

God is the standard. Anything out of line with the nature and character of God is wrong. Jesus was the very embodiment of the way, the truth and the life (John 14:6).

LOVE & SYMPATHY

We offer our love & sympathy to the family of Dean Tapparo who passed from this life last Sunday evening.
